Staff Highlight: John Healy (Book Monitor)

After high school I attended Duquesne University in Pittsburgh. The best thing that happened at Duquesne was meeting my wife. We got engaged in our sophomore year and were married right after graduation. I went into the Army Reserve for active duty training to be a drill sergeant. After my Army training I worked as a management trainee at a large valve manufacturer. I soon realized this was not my cup of tea and decided to get into law enforcement. I became a police officer and earned my Master's degree in Criminal Justice. While a law enforcement officer I had many exciting and interesting experiences. My three year assignment as a member of the F.B.I. Fugitive Task Force was the high point in my career. After I retired from law enforcement I was a special investigator for an insurance company. After that I worked part time for the Judicial Branch as an investigator and trainer for their training academy. I have also served as a fire commissioner for the city of Milford where I reside. My greatest joy comes from my three children and eight grandchildren. Both my daughters are teachers and my son is a police officer. Thanks, John Healy

Recent Rare Book Acquisition:

The dissertation, Manipulus decimarum, sive, Quaestiones X. canonicae et plures controversiae de decimis (Innsbruck: Benedict Carol Reisacher, 1692), is by Kaspar Ignaz von Künipl (1671-1747), later a notable bishop of Brixen, a city in the Italian Alps to the south of Innsbruck. The dissertation is a methodical legal analysis of controversies surrounding tithes.
